So a div tag is actually added to the xml document. My guess is that there might be something wrong with this code tag. Can anyone help me with this? Thanks in advance. This is my first post so go easy. Oh, and please tell me I'm not asking the deuce question lol. A: The div tags are stripped out. The DOM Level 2 HTML specifications say, "An HTML element with a name other than in-line () has no contents, since that is taken for granted when that element is used to generate an element without contents." You have a tag named content that isn't used anywhere. The empty tag is probably what's causing the problems. Q: requestAnimationFrame Issue (SVG) - proper way to detect scale factor (pixel) Context Render to canvas or SVG basically jQuery SVG - which uses requestAnimationFrame and already has a canvsmouse event. Problem So I want to have a game loop that renders to canvas and/or SVG (all on the same page) Because I want to be able to zoom to the canvas context's contentViewport, or SVG element, I might want to work with absolute units, but will convert to relative when rendering. To convert from absolute units back to relative: var canvas = window.innerWidth, svg = window.innerWidth * 1.25; This will get the canvas width as pixels, and convert it to relative width. Same for SVG. Problem The problem is that requestAnimationFrame returns the number of milliseconds, so I'm not able to render correct units on canvas and SVG separately. Canvas if scale > 1 would render 2 ms

Gary Herbert met with the United States Attorney's Office on Friday to discuss the Salt Lake City Police Department's use of racial profiling to target and stop an African-American driver. The governor's office said in a news release Saturday that, following the meeting with federal prosecutors, Herbert directed The Utah Department of Public Safety to work with the Salt Lake City Police Department on a plan to curb racial profiling. The governor's office also said the governor had launched an investigation into the actions of the Salt Lake City Police Department and requested the Utah Department of Public Safety to conduct its own investigation into the department. The police department hasn't made any arrests in the case since last year, according to The Salt Lake Tribune. Salt Lake City Police Chief Mike Brown "reiterated his department's need to have an impartial, outside review in order to determine if the MPD used racial profiling in a potential court case," the governor's office said. The governor and the city have been in talks since last September over police department practices and the hiring of a new police chief. The Salt Lake City mayor's office and the Utah Transit Authority had also expressed concern over the department's practices. In a statement released Thursday following the mayor's comments, the governor noted that "the U.S. Justice Department Civil Rights Division may be involved in the ongoing investigation of MPD's actions." "I understand the community's desire for a quick resolution of this matter, and I am thankful that the Utah Department of Public Safety has acted swiftly to address the concerns of the Utah Attorney General's Office and the city attorney regarding the MPD's practices," Herbert said. "There is a high likelihood that MPD will need to work through a lengthy and burdensome court process to address these accusations." In November 2014, Herbert said the city and police department were in discussions with the American Civil Liberties Union on reviewing current department practices, following a former police officer's comments in a court hearing
